THE WOMAN AND HEN.

A woman owned a hen which laid only one egg each day. Once while doing some shopping, she was attracted by a street fakir, who sold her some fake oil on the promise that it would make her hen lay as it never laid before.

The woman pours the oil down the hen's throat after which, the hen drops dead. Then the woman realizes the full import of the fakir's words, "It will make her lay as she never laid before."

Moral:

"THOSE WHO EXPECT TOO MUCH OF TIMES OVER-REACH THEMSELVES."

Modern Adaptations:

Congress is shown piling taxes on the back of the Common People, until he is about to sink under the weight. Uncle Sam enters and tells Congress that if she keeps piling taxes on him, pretty soon he will not be able to pay any at all.
